ABOUT THE COURSE

The construction sector in India is governed by a comprehensive legislative framework aimed at protecting the occupational safety, health, and welfare of workers. Given the sector's temporary worksites, diverse workforce, and high rate of labour migration, effective understanding and implementation of these laws is critical. Many occupational risks in construction arise from inadequate compliance, weak enforcement, and lack of awareness of statutory provisions.

This training programme focuses on the legislative framework for Occupational Safety and Health (OSH) in the Indian construction sector, with special emphasis on the Building and Other Construction Workers (BOCW) Act and related rules. It highlights the responsibilities of employers, contractors, supervisors, and site management in complying with statutory requirements. The programme aims to strengthen legal awareness, improve compliance, and support organisations in achieving leading safety performance indicators while ensuring the safety, health, and well-being of construction workers.

OBJECTIVE

The objective of this training programme is to enhance participants' understanding of the legislative and practical aspects of Occupational Safety and Health (OSH) in the construction sector.
